

The Heifer Global Village is a collection of model homes reflecting living conditions in regions of the world where Heifer International works. Here you can find African mud huts with thatch roofs, a bamboo stilt-house from South Asia, and a block house from Guatemala with real hand-painted Mayan tiles, among others. But the Global Village is more than model homes. This is an opportunity to learn of other cultures and where one can...

The Global Village is a hands on learning experience where guests can explore world cultures and challenges people living in impoverished communities face daily. Participants can explore the causes and effects of chronic hunger, poverty and lack of access to resources such as education and clean water. Students will challenge their own beliefs, examine their own habits and consumption patterns to identify how to become more responsible citizens.

Who visits the Village

- Local public school groups;
- Local private school groups;

Authentic Mongolian Yurt

Did you know that over 30 million people (typically women) walk over 3.5 miles daily to get enough water to meet the needs of their family?

Do you know your water footprint and why it is important?

China claims to have eliminated poverty from Tibet 100%. Harvard researchers say they actually did. What are the lessons for others, and why do protests continue?

Enough food is produced each year to more than meet the needs of every person on earth. Why then is there extensive hunger in the world today, and what can you do?
